Must, differently expressed (1) by the partic. fat. pass. = a necessity inferred from the circumstances of the case, e.g. people, we (you, etc.) — die, moritundum est; one — confess that every living creature is mortal, omne animal, confitendum est, esse mortale; the person by which a thing is to be done, in the dative, very seldom by ab, and only when a second dative would make the meaning ambiguous and obscure; e.g. every one — use his own judgment, suo cuique iudicio utendum est; the property of many citizens is at stake, of which you — take every care, aguntur bona multorum civium, quibus a vobis consulendum est (here a volis on account of quibus, clie, who in another passage has also two datives with the part. fat. pass.); if the verb is transitive, only unclassical writers add the object in the acc., whilst classical writers change the latter into the noun, with the partic. In the same gender and case, e.g. we — take the same road, huc via (nobis) ingredienda est (not hanc viam ingrediendum est); one — know nature, nosenda est natura; the speaker — consider three points, tria cetera sunt oratori; (2) by oportet (impersonal, dei, expressing a necessity inferred from reason, or from the law, or from prudence or justice), with the acc. and inf., or merely with the subjunctive mood (especially to avoid ambiguity), e.g. this man — be bad, hunc hominem oportet esse impudicum (I have my reasons to think so); this — (from inner reasons) and shall (because it is probable) be done, acc fieri oportet et opus est; we — (dare) despise nothing in times of war, nihil in bello oportet contemni; there are things which one — (shall, dare, etc.) not do, even though they may be allowed; but whatever is not allowed, one should not do at all, est aliquid quod non oportet etiam fieri; quidquid vero non licet, certe non oportet; he who does not know the way to the sea, — take the river as his guide, viam qui nescit, quod deteniat ad mare, cum oportet omnem sihi quaerere; the owner — be in good circumstances if he makes up his mind to make a good use of his acquired property, calcat possessor, oportet, si comparatis bene rebus cogitat ulli; you — love me, not my money, if we are to be real friends to each other, me ipsum ames oportet, non mea, si veri amici futuri simus; (3) by debere (debeire), to express a moral obligation, e.g. you — honour him like your father, cum patris loco colere debes; if we were affected in seeing the misery of our allies, what — we now do when we see our own blood shed? sociorum miseriam commovebamur, quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus? Debere, therefore, is nearly = officium; so that we can also express — by officium est aleis and simply est aleis, with this difference, that the former implies, it belongs to any one, it is any one's duty; the latter, it behooves any one, e.g. a stranger — mind only his own affairs, peregrini officium est (i.e. peregrinus debet) nihil proter suum negotium agere; a good orator — have hard and even much, est boni oratoris (i.e. bonus orator debet) multa auribus accepisse, multa ridisse. Officium is generally left out when we say I, you —, meum, tuum, vestrum est; (4) by gignere and existimare, in the rhetorical style, as a form of politeness, so that the hearers may be allowed to come to a conclusion themselves about a point, e.g. you see to what a pitch the republic — proceed, videte quem in locum rempublicam perenturam pulsit; (5) by opus est (impersonal χρῆν), in speaking of any event subjectively felt, and from the supplying of which we expect great advantages; either with acc. and inf., or if the person, who — do, etc., a thing, is added in the dative, then ut with subjunctive mood, or abl. past partic. passive voice, e.g. if any thing should happen, which you — know (which it is useful for you to know), I'll write to you, si quid erit, quod te scire opus est, scribam; I — go and wash myself, mihi opus est ut laeum. Also "I — have so and so" may be rendered by mihi opus est, either impersonally with abl., or personally with the nominative of the person or thing that — be had, e.g. we — have a guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est; we — use your authority, auctoritate tua nobis opus est; (6) by necesse est (impersonal, ἀνάγκη ἐστι), expressing the most unavoidable necessity; either with acc. and inf., or simply with subjunctive mood, e.g. this mortal frame of ours — (necessarily) perish some time, corpus mortale alio tempore perire necesse est; virtue — (necessarily) abominate and hate vice, virtus necesse est vitium aspernetur et oderit; man — necessarily die, hominem necesse est mori. "I — necessarily have so and so" may likewise be rendered by necesse est; e.g. don't buy what you want, but what you — have as a matter of necessity, emus non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est; (7) by facere non possum, or simply non possum with quid, etc., or fieri non potest with ut non, etc., or non possum non with inf., to express what cannot be avoided, inward necessity, e.g. I — exclaim, non possum quin exclamem; I — thank you, non possum quin tibi gratias agam; you — have known him, fieri non potest ut eum non cognoveris; I — confess that my joy was raised to the highest pitch, etc., non possum non confiteri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, quod, etc.; (8) simply by the verb. (a) in the indicative, inasmuch as in Latin we often leave it for the reader to supply in his own mind under what circumstances an action took place, e.g. I — confess, confiteor (Tit.);, fateor (Cic.); I — regret, dolo (Cic.); I — express my surprise, miror (Liv.); I — declare my great astonishment, exceperunt admiror; I — see, video; I — blame, reprehendo; I — fear lest not, etc., verere, ut non; I — avoid my own native country, carpo patriam; this one thing I — remark, nam illud dico; (b) in the subjunctive, if we only speak of a supposed necessity, e.g. a circumstance, at which not only all educated people, but even savages — blush, o rem dignam, in qua non modo docti, et utrum etiam agrestes et ubereant. Besides, we may bear in mind the following modes of speaking: (1) it — just happen or be, that, etc., casi accidit, forte evenit, ut, etc., or simply by forte; e.g. it — be that the ambassadors of Prusias dined with L. Quintus Flaminius, accidit casu, ut legati Prusiae apud L. Quintum Flaminium conarentur; it — happen that we were at the time on the estate of Priverna, forte evenit, ut in Privernate essemus; when I went away from you, it — happen that I met Phormio, ut abii abs te, sit forte obvium mihi Phormio; (2) you — (as urgent appeal), either simply by the imperative mood, or by fac ut, e.g. if you are not satisfied with that, you — accuse your own injustice, hac si tibi non in obabuntur, vestram iniquitatem accusatote; you — live in good hopes, magnum fac animum habeo et bonam spem; you — not (as an urgent warning, not to a thing), fac ne, etc. (mind that not, etc.), caro ne (take care lest, or not to, etc.), noli with inf., e.g. you — not wish, cave ne cupias; you — not forget that you are Cicero, nolite oblivisci Ciceronem esse; you — not wish impossibilities, nolite id velle quod fieri non potest; (3) that it —, as a great wish, with the subj., e.g. that it — tend to your benefit, sit tibi hoc saluti; (4) expressing indignation, that this . . . , simply with inf., e.g. that this — have happened just now! hoc nunc maxime accidit! that that man — come just now! istum virum nunc quidem venire! (5) if it — be, in the future, si res ita feret.

Nitrogen, n. principium azoticum*; full of —, principio azotico infectus*.

No, adv. non, minime vero, minime . . . quidem (—, not at all), immo, immo vero, immo nemero, immo potius (—, rather to the contrary); instead of our — in answer to a question, we generally repeat the verb of the preceding question, e.g. is your brother within? estne frater intus? —! non! or better non est! you are not angry, I hope! non iratus es! —! non sum iratus! I don't you believe that? an tu hæc non credis? —, not at all, minime vero! are we at fault then? num igitur peccamus? —, not you! minime nos quidem; or are you still of the opinion that it is not necessary to make a suitable law for an excellent republic? an censes non necesse esse optima civibus leges dare consentaneas? —! on the contrary I am quite of the opinion, immo proposita censeo; so then you deceive him? sicne hunc decipis? —! on the contrary he deceives me, immo enim vero hic me decipit; for the phrase "—! that is not it," it would be bad to use non twice, and to say, non, non ita est, e.g. —! that is not it, ye judges; —! it is not indeed! non est ita, iudices! non est profecto! to say yes or —, aut etiam aut non respondere; one says yes, the other —, hic ait, ille negat; to say — to any thing that is offered us, to decline, abnuere or recusare aliquid or de aliquid re, negare se aliquid facturum esse; to exclaim —! reclamare. No, None, adj., nullus, nemo (both as adj. and subst., but nullus may be said both of persons and things, nemo of persons only), non ullus, non quisquam (not one, if a great stress is to be laid upon the negative; the former as an adj., the latter as a noun), neuter (neither, must always be used, if we speak of two individuals or of two parties); if nullus and nemo are used in a partitive sense, that is, if — stands in opp. to the remaining parts or the whole, they govern the genit., the same as "none," e.g. — mortal, nenemo mortalium; — animal is more prudent, nulla beluarum prudentior est; the genit. may also sometimes be expressed by a circuml. with de, ex, e.g. — man of our army was killed, nemo de nostris cecidit; sometimes it would appear that instead of nullus and nemo we use in Latin nihil (with genit., when it stands for nullus); however, nihil expresses the negative stronger than nullus = none at all, e.g. there is — one (at all) more miserable than I am, and — one more happy than Catulus, nihil me infortunatius, nihil fortunatius est Catulo; to have — doubt (at all), nihil dubitationis habere; very often we use — when the negative does not rise to any thing in general, but to something particular; in this case, which takes place principally when — belongs as an adj. to a noun or refers as a predicate to a noun previously mentioned, we use in Latin the negative non instead of nullus, e.g. I know that I am the bearer of — very joyful news, scio non juxta desiderium nuncium me vobis allaturum; — snow falls on the high seas, nives in alto non cadunt; they had — honey, mel non habebant; you ordered them

— ship, navem tis non imperasti. We likewise use non in Latin for — when the object in English is expressed by a verbal noun, e.g. to have — fear, non timere; to feel — doubt, non dubitare; to feel — hatred against any one, non odire aliquid, etc.; and —, also —, et nullus, nec ullus (adv.), nemo quisquam (subst.); — one, nemo quisquam, nemo unus; — man, nemo homo; at — place, nusquam; at — time, numquam, nullo tempore; and at — time, nec unquam; in — respect, nihil; in — way, nullo modo, nulla ratione, neutra ratione (of two). Nobody, n. nemo, nullus (no; as the genit. of nemo, nenimis was little used, nullus was said instead), nemo homo, nemo unus, nemo quisquam (stronger than nemo, = — at all); and —, nec ullus, nec quisquam; — is also frequently expressed in Latin by nihil (or nil), e.g. — possessed greater faults and greater virtues than he, nihil illo fuit excellentius vel in rebus vel in virtutibus; — was ever so much at variance with himself, nil fuit unquam sic impar sibi.

Noble, adj. nobilis (noble, with or without blood), generosus (one noble by birth). Nobility (of position or blood), n. nobilitas, genus nobile, quærens stirps; — by age, generis antiquitas; new —, nobilitas nova, — by lofty position, summo loco natum esse; nobility = loftiness of soul, generositas, ingenuitas. Noise, n. strepitus (loud — caused by men and inanimate objects, e.g. vessels, arms, by striking the one against the other; the creaking of wheels, etc., the — which any one makes), frēnitus (low, hollow — caused by animate beings, e.g. the humming —, murmuring of a crowd of people, burring of bees, foaming of horses, rattling of the bit of the horse, the hollow — of arms, the — under the earth and of the sea), crepitus (clattering, clashing —, e.g. the wings of a bird in flying, of a door when it is opened, of two shields clapped together, etc.), sonitus (loud, clear sounds, e.g. of a trumpet, also the roaring of flames, the loud rushing of water, etc.), stridor (the whizzing —, e.g. of a saw), frugor (the creaking, e.g. of a house that falls, of dry wood when it is broken), murmur (murmuring — of water), turbæ (confusion), tumultus, tumultuatio (uproar with clamour; then in general any —, caused by a sedition mob or by a single individual, the former as a condition, the latter as the act of making a —), comb. strepitus et tumultus; without a —, sine strepitu, sine sonitu; to make a —, strepere, strepitum edere (so placed that it echoes), frēnere, concipere, strepitum facere aliquid re, tumultum facere, tumultuare (to shout, also in a camp, when the enemy is approaching), clamare, proclamare, clamitare (to cry with a loud voice), incendium conclamare (to cry fire, Sen.), ad arma conclamare (to call to arms, to raise an alarm, with the trumpet, drums, etc.; different from clavum canere, to sound the signal for making an attack); to make a deal of — all about nothing, excitare fluctus in simpulo, ut doctus (prov. Cic.), magis conatu magnas nugæ dicere (with Varro); what is it you make a — about, inter! and what are you going on so about? quid tumultuatur, error? quid insanis? what was the cause of the —? quid tumultus et turbæ fuit? (e.g. on the forum, apud forum); let there be any — raised here, ne quid turbæ hic fiat; to set out with great — (of the army), magno strepitu et tumultu castra moerit; with all the —, præ strepitu (e.g. not to be able to hear any thing); — maker, clamator (of a bad speaker), proclamator, rabula (of a bad attorney, a pettifogger; rabulista is barbarous). Noiseless, quietus (quiet; not tranquillus in this sense), tacitus (silent); a — life, vita quæta et otiosa; to spend —, vitam quietam et otiosam traducere; adv. quiete, tacite, silentio, cum silentio (in silence). Noiselessness, silentium (e.g. of the night, noctis), with noiselessness, silentio, cum silentio. Noisy, adj. strepens, fremens, tumultuosus (full of shout and uproar, e.g. concio).

Nomadæ, n. nomas -idis, m. (βοιῆς); plur. nomades (vovides), in pure Latin cagæ gantes, or by circuml. with homines, quod pastu pecudum maxime utuntur, campos et montes hinc et astute peragrantes, or with homines qui sequuntur rapi pecora, or homines qui rapi pecorum pabula sequuntur, atque ut illa durant, ita diu statam sedem, agunt, et gentes subinde sedem mutant. Nomadic, adj. by the genit. nomadum; a — life, nomadum vita*; to lead a — life, sequi vagantur, vagari, pecorum pabula sequi atque ut illa durant, ita diu statam sedem agere.

Nomenclator, n. index nominum, nomenclator (nomenclator; but nomenclatura is not good).

Nominal, adj. e.g. a — announcement, nominis or (of several) nominum indicium; to make a — announcement of any thing, nominatim indicare, alqd; to mention any one nominally, aliquid indicare. Nominally, adv. nominis, nominatim; of a — title, by nomen, e.g. a — commander, nomen tantum ducti; to be a — professor, manere professoris nomine lenis fungi*. Nominative, n. casus nominandi, reclus casus; in the singular —, recto casu numero singulari.

Nose, n. nasus (part of the face; then what is like a —), nares (nostrils; hence the —, an organ for breathing and smelling; also the sing., naris, if we speak of one nostril); a — that projects at the top and is pinched below, nasus a summo eminentior et ad imo deductior; a fine Roman —, nasus drupetus al onem decorem; a flat —, nasus simus or collisus; a crooked —, nasus aduertus; one who has a flat —, simus; a sharp-edged —, nasus acutus; a large —, nasus magnus; one with a large —, nasutus, nass (as nicknaw); a fine —, nasus sagax, nures sagaces (one who easily finds things out, of animals and men), ecce nares (hæ., a fine taste, one who has the talent of observation; Hor.); one who has a fine —, sagax (lit., one who is quickly on the scent, then fig. = sharp), callidus or (but only vulgar) emuncta naris (fig. of a fine observer, Hor.); to have a fine —, acutum habere nazum (lit.), festive omnium odorari (fig.); to blow one's —, nares or se emungere; to poke with the fingers in the —, digitis nures inquirere; to bend this — upwards with the palm of the hand, nares iuncta manu resupinare; to breathe loud (with the —), to snifle, prælo subito spirite nares exercere; to distend the —, nares diluere; to hold a thing to the —, alqd naribus or ad nares admovere; to put a thing into the —, dimittere alqd in narem or nares; the — is wet, nares lument; the — bleeds, sanguis ex naribus or per nares fluit or prorumpit, sanguis per nares erumpit; to turn up the —, naribus contemptum or fusillum attender (to express contempt or disgust, analogus to Quint.; corrugare nares, Hor., of some thing very disgusting, so as to cause the — to become wrinkled); to turn up the — at any one (from contempt), alqm suspendere nures (Hor.); to cock the —, superbire, on account of any thing, alqd re (always with the abl. of the thing, that causes us to be proud, being added, unless it is already evident from the context), magnifice de re statuere, alqd sibi esse ceteris (to have a high opinion of one's self); he carries his — high, altiores spiritus gerit (Tac.); — band, vinculum nasi*; bridge of the —, os nasi*; he has broken the bridge of his —, nasus ei collisus est; bleeding of the —, fluxus sanguis per nares, narium sanguis, profluvium annuialis e naribus; something at the bleeding of the —, alqd narium sanguinem sistit; the juice of it instilled into the —, when it is held up, stops the bleeding, succus ejus instillatus naribus equinis profluvium sanguinis sistit; somebody's — bleeds, alex sanguis ex naribus or per nares fluit or prorumpit, alex sanguis per nares erumpit; whoever has suffered in his childhood from bleeding of the —, but lost it afterwards, has either to suffer from headache, or, etc., quibus in pueritia sanguis ex naribus fluxit, dein fluere desinit, hi res capitis doloribus conflantur, vel, etc.; wing of the —, nasus imus; swelling in the —, ozæna, narium œdema (Græcæ), polypus (πολύπους, polypus of the —); the hairs in the —, nostrils, tribria; tendon of the —, cartilago narium*; tip of the —, nares primores (according to Lucret., who uses nasi primoris in the gen. sing., whence it may be inferred that the term can be used in all the oblique cases); rap over the —, illip, latitum; to illip one, latitum alci infringere*; dripping of blood from the —, stillans per nares sanguis*; end of the —, pinacula narium*; to lead any one by the —, alqm eludere et extrahere (to make a fool of any one and keep him waiting), alqm lactare ei falsis spe prodecer (Ter., to keep any one in suspense with false hopes), alqm variis dilationibus frustrare, alqm rovis frustrationibus differre (to keep any one waiting day after day).

Noway, fascicul (Aorum); to tie a — for any one, flores neceret.

Nostrils, n. nares; to inflate the —, nares inflare, nares diducere.

Not, adv. non, haud (the former in general, the latter = exactly, and only in certain comb., chiefly before adv. and adj., to modify their meaning, e.g. — much, haud multum; — far, haud longe; nullus, as frequently used by modern writers, in ancient writers not merely = non, but = — at all, e.g. Philotimus non modo nullus venit, sed, etc., Cic.), minus (less, not as strong as non), nihil (like Greek ὅθεν, stronger than —, = by no means), neutiquam, haudququam, nequaquam, minime (also stronger than —), ne (differs from the other words expressing —, inasmuch that these deny some fact, whilst ne only refers to a subjective feeling, and expresses a request, wish, command, e.g. don't resist, if, etc., ne repugnatis, si, etc.; dare —, ne audido; I do — wish to be alive, if, etc., ne vivam, si, etc.; you should — have asked for it, ne poposcisses, fac ne, with subjunctive mood (see Lest, etc.), or care (ne) with subj. (take care lest, etc.), or noli (with infin., do — wish, all three only = an invitation, a request, etc. uttered in a modest manner, instead of ne, also = don't just, e.g. do — mind any thing else, but only this, that, etc.; fac ne quid aliud cures, nisi ut, etc.; don't be tempted to, cave cupias; don't believe it, cave credas; don't wish for a thing that cannot be done, nolite id velle, quod fieri non potest; but parce or fuge with infin. are Hellenisms, which are foreign to classical prose). In questions — is expressed (1) by annon (perhaps—), when the person, that asks, wishes something that has taken place or been mentioned before, as to whether any thing is so or —, although he may be convinced that it is as he thinks, e.g. did I — say perhaps that it would happen so? annon dixi hoc futurum? (2) by nonne, —, if we put a question with a view to convince any one that we are right, e.g. what does — the dog resemble the wolf? quid, canis nonne lupo similis? or also, e.g. with verbs that express a perception, if we wish to give the person that asks us to understand that he sees a thing but does — think of it, e.g. you, who are of opinion that the gods neglect the affairs of mankind, do you — perceive, anne tu qui deos putas humana negligere, nonne animadvertis, etc. (3) by ne (e.g. with verbs that express a perception, if we are not certain whether the person spoken to perceives the thing, or when we think that he is not sufficiently aware of it, e.g. do you — see that very often in Homer Nestor makes a boast of his virtues videns ut apud Homerum sapissimum Nestor de virtutibus pradicat? (4) by non, if we think that the person does — at all perceive the thing to which we wish to direct his attention, e.g. don't you see how great the danger is when, etc., non videtis quanto periculo, etc. (the person spoken to is — aware of the danger); but non is also frequently used when we speak in a lively manner, e.g. it is — complete nonsense, non est amentia; we must also notice that in using annon and nonne, we expect an answer in the affirmative, whilst in using ne and non we expect a negative answer; when several questions are put in succession, the interrogative particle is repeated in every question if it is used in an emphatic manner, but after nonne we use only non in the other questions. — on any account, minime, minime gentium, fac or care ne with subjunct., noli with inf.; — by any means, nullo pacto, nullo modo (in no wise), nihil; — at all, neutiquam; — so very (before an adj. or adv.), haud or non ita (parum is bad in this sense), e.g. — so very far, haud (non) ita longe; — sufficiently, — quite, non satis, parum (too little, opp. nimis); — even, ne . . . quidem (the word upon which the stress lies must be placed between ne and quidem, e.g. I don't even consider this profitable, ne utile quidem hoc esse arbitror; — once, non semel (several times), ne semel quidem (— once even); — so, i.e. (1) — in this manner, non ita, non sic; (2) = less, minus; e.g. — to stray so far, minus late vagari; but —, non vero, neque vero, non autem (the second in passing to something else; non autem sometimes separated by a word which is put between, e.g. but I can — tell you, non possum autem dicere; if “but —” is merely used to introduce an antithesis, non alone is used; e.g. I mean the father, but — the son, dico patrem, non filium); but . . . —, = however . . ., nece or neque; — either, nece or neque (the latter chiefly in passing to something else, = and neither, e.g. Epicurus says, we do — require understanding, and — words either, Epicurus negat opus esse ratione, neque disputatione; fortune does — give us virtue, and therefore does — take it away either, virtutem fortunam non dat, idcirco nec detrahit; but also . . ., nece . . . quidem (the words upon which the stress lies is placed between nece and quidem, especially in opp. to something else, e.g. but also Jugurtha did — remain quiet in the mean time, sed nec Jugurtha quidem quietus interea; etiam non is barbarous); and —, et non (when the negative refers to one word only, as when the stress lies upon the negative), neque (to connect two sentences or two parts of the same sentence, e.g. via certa et non longa = a safe road and one that is — very long, but via certa neque longa = a road both safe and short; ac non must not be confounded with either of these, see below); and so —, and therefore —, ac non (to express an inference, e.g. there was nobody who would have taken him to be accused of a crime, and who would — therefore think that he had been condemned over and over again, nemo erat qui illum reum, ac non milies condemnatum arbitrarctur; and — rather, ac non potius, or simply ac non; and — less, atque etiam, itemque (and so also, likewise also; not atque ideo, = and even, non nec non, which in the sense of “likewise, so also” is foreign to classical prose); because —, quod non; — . . ., but, non . . ., sed; — . . ., but rather, non . . ., sed potius; — . . ., but still, non . . ., at; non . . ., sed tamen; — . . ., but still at least, non . . ., sed certe; — . . ., but — even, non . . ., sed ne . . ., quidem; — . . ., neither, non . . ., nec quidem (the word upon which the stress lies must stand between nec and quidem); — . . ., if —, or — . . ., except if or when or that, non . . ., nisi; — by any means . . ., unless it were that, etc., haud . . ., nisi; — that (in order that) . . ., but in order that (or lest), non ut . . ., sed ut (or sed ne); non est . . ., verum ut; — that . . ., but in order that the more, non ut . . ., sed quo (for sed ut eo); — lest . . ., but in order that the more, non quin . . ., sed ut; — that — . . ., but still, non quin . . ., sed or sed tamen; — that perhaps . . ., but still, non quo . . ., sed tamen; — that . . ., but on the contrary, non quo . . ., sed contra; — because . . ., but in order that, or but lest, non quia . . ., sed ut or sed ne; — because . . ., but because, non quia . . ., sed quia; non quod . . ., sed quod; non quod . . ., sed quo; — . . . on account of, but because, or but in order that, or but lest, non aleis rei causa, sed quod; non aleis rei causa, sed ut or sed ne; — as if — . . ., but because, non quin . . ., sed quia or sed quod; — on that account that, or — because . . ., but in order that, non quo (or non quod) . . ., sed ut (or but lest, sed ne); — on this account that . . ., but because, non ideo quod . . ., sed ut; — on this account, in order that . . ., but lest, non ideo ut . . ., sed ne; — as if . . ., but in order that, non quisi . . ., sed ut; I say, that . . ., etc., I maintain that it is . . ., etc., expressed in Latin by nego with acc. and inf., e.g. my friend said that he would or should — do it, meus amicus negabat se hoc facturum esse; in connexion with an adj. — is often rendered in Latin by one word, containing — and the adj. e.g. — prudent, amens (silly), demens (foolish), — pleasant, infructuosus, ingratus (we ought, however, to be very cautious in using these adjs. compounded with the particle in, as they are not very common in the golden age, e.g. — tired, non defatigatus, not indefessus, which is not classical); in comp. with a noun — is rendered in Latin by non, but so that non is separated from the noun; — yet, see Yet.

Notary, n. scriba publicus (appointed by the state), signator (one who draws up a marriage-contract or a will), scriba censualis (in whose presence wills were opened and placed on record, late; notarius and notarius were in ancient times a kind of short-hand writer); the office of a —, munus scribae publici or signatoris; the seal of the —, signum signatoris (Jett.).

Notation, n. inscriptio alie rei (upon); = the act of noting down, scriptio, perscriptio, subscriptio (the writing down of one's name, nominis); — of one's fortune, property through the censor, census. Note, n. (1) in music; soni or cœcia signum; to play or sing from notes, ex libello canere* (not from memory), ab oculo canere* (at sight); (2) — of an ambassador, literæ; — book (for music), liber modorum musicorum*; a compiler of notes (in a contemptuous sense), inutilium commentariorum conscriptor; copier of notes, qui modos musicos describit*. To note, v.tr. notare, annotare (post-Aug., but classical). Notes, n.pl. plagule junctæ* (several sheets of paper tied together), propillares (tablet, pocket-book or slate, in or on which the young men in the schools of the philosophers wrote down what was dictated to them, e.g. aliqui tamen et cum pugillaribus remiunt, non ut res excipiant, sed verba, Sen.), libellus (a little work, or book containing written notes, e.g. sermonem ex libello habere, to read a lecture, sermon from one's notes, Suet.), commentarii, commentaria or commentariola (Jett.). n. (notes, short sketches written down, both any remarkable incidents in one's course of studies, and notes taken down from a lecture, e.g. ipsam de rebus semper quasi dictata decantare [always to read again the same notes] neque a commentariolis suis discedere [to depart from the text in his notes], Cic.; sunt velut regestæ in hos commentarios, quos adolescentes deduxerant, scholæ, Quint.), dictata (Jett.), dictationes of a professor or written down by the student, also perhaps dictata preceptoris aculemici culmo excepta; any one's college-notes; scholæ professorum (in commentarios alie regestæ [rendered according to Quint.]).

On, prep., of place, in with ablat., e.g. in saxo, — the rock; in terrâ, — the ground (e.g. fructus in terrâ est); in seniâ, — the stage; in capite, — the head; in equo, — horseback; in limite, — the borders. "On" is sometimes rendered by ex, e.g. to hang — the tree, pendere ex arbore; as denoting time — is expressed by the abl. without a preposition, e.g. — the fourth day, quarto die; a or ab often represents —, e.g. — the side, ab parte; — the left hand, ab lævâ; — the wing, a latere, to be — any one's side, stare ab alio (to take part with one); bad — the part of (in) disposition, ab ingenio improbus. (Compare what is said under "In.") The essential difference between "on" and "in" lies in this, that while "on" implies "superficial superimposition," "in" denotes "internal superimposition"; thus, the wine is in the bottle and the bottle is — the table: both these relations are expressed by the Latin in. To speak — or upon any thing, de alqd re loqui; to fall —, inradere, opprimere, occupare. On account of, propter, ob, pro, de, pro, pro, causa, gratia, erga.

Propter is properly = near (e.g. qui propter te ardet, he who is near you); thence = on account of, e.g. propter timorem, on account of fear (pro-mel); so propter pecuniam, propter hereditatem, continentiam, a wife's arces = the inheritance; amicitia propter se expellenda, friendship is to be sought for on its own account, on account of business I cannot, etc., per negotia mehi non licet. For certain reasons, certis de causis; = account of the noise it can scarcely be heard, pro strepitu eix audiri potest.

(One, adj.) (as a numeral), unus - a - um; not used in Latin except for emphasis, e.g. the matrons mourned Brutus for a year, Matronae annum Brutum luerant (which would become unum annum if used to contradict the mourning being for two years). In such phrases as "a Cato, a Gallus," etc., the Latins generally employed the plural, e.g. numerosus puerulos, Otones, Gallus, let us enumerate "a Paulus, a Cato, a Gallus." A certain —, quidam, e.g. in domo ejuſdem, nomine Cameli, in the house of a certain —, by name Camelus; some —, aliqui, unus aliquis; aliquis ex vobis, some — of you; unus aliquis ex his, some — of thy friends; aliquis priorum regum, some — of the former kings; any —, quispiam, e.g. forsitan quisquam dixerit, any — may perhaps say; in-*quis*um ne esse quisquam dicit, any — will say that I am unjust; so dicit aliquis forte, some — will perchance say; each —, quisque, e.g. de captivis ut quisque liber aut servus erat, sine fortune a quoque supplicium sumptum est, of the captives each was executed according to his condition, as each was a free man or a slave. After the particle si, visi, ne, num, quando, ubi, and generally in conditional propositions, even without a conjunction, use quis instead of aliquis or quisquam, e.g. ubi semel quis priore erat, ei postea credi non oportet, when once any — has sworn falsely, he ought not afterwards to be believed. In negative sentences, and in such as contain a negative sense, — any — is to be rendered as a noun by quisquam, and "any" alone as adjective by ullus, e.g. estne quisquam omnium mortalium de quo melius existimes in? Is there any — of all mortals of whom you think better? no in est ullus res tanti? Is there any thing so important? "As any —" is rendered quum qui maxime, e.g. tam sum amicus republice quam qui maxime, I am as friendly to the state as any —. No —, nemo. One = alter (when there are only two objects), e.g. altero pede clavus, lame in — foot. Unus ille, that one, e.g. unum illud addaxi, I will add only that — thing; ae una haec res torquet, this — thing torments me; uno rerdo, in — word; uno tenore, in — tone; not even —, ne unus quidem, non ullus, nemo unus (not a single person); not — of us, nemo de nobis unus; not — of them, id nulli; — and another, unus et alter, unus alterque (both together); some —, several, non nemo, unus et item alter; — after the other, alter post alterum, alius ex alio, alii super alios, aliquitque alius, alios rebinde; singuli deinceps — by — in a series), alternis (so. certibus, when two sing alternately); — as much as the other, alterque pariter, ambo pariter, the — ... the other, ceteri ... alter, hic ... ille, prior ... posterior, alii ... alii; alii ... prior (or pariter), prior ... alii, quidam ... alii; — the other, alter alteri or alterum (of two), alios alii or aliam, e.g. alter alterum or alios aliam cupient, the — wishes the other; so timeat inter se, they fear — another; if "other" refers to a substantive, repeat the substantive, e.g. manus manuum lavat, — hand washes the other; so civis civi parat and ex domo in domum migravit, at — time; — at another, alio ... alio, e.g. alio beatum, alius miser. The — this, the other that, alios alios, alia alia, alios alios (in different manners), alios alio (— way, another another), alios alibi, alios alios; alios alios periculum est (danger is free from different quarters), alios alio causa "the" may also be used with a kind of relative force, e.g. hunc ele-

phantis viret; did you not see — I please aderant elephantis; num unum vidisti. Aliquis also may be used in this way, e.g. hi sunt tui libri; num aliquis ex ipsis legisti? here are your books; have you read any — of them! — and the same, unus atque idem, unus idemque; uno eodemque tempore, at — and the same time; itis — and the same, idem est, par est; — and another, aliud ... aliud, e.g. aliud est virgines rapere, aliud punire cum viris, it is — thing to carry off virgins, and another thing to — with men; ejusdem coloris, of — and the same colour; to be — and the same, nihil differre, nihil interesse, labour and pain are not — and the same, interest aliquid inter laborem et dolorem; it is all — to me, res nihil interest; to be always at — thing, uno opere eandem incudem diem noctemque tundere. Thanks, n. gratiæ (often in the pl., when it is stronger), grates (solemn and in forms of prayer, but not used in good prose); to deserve any one's —, gratiam mereri, gratiam inire apud aliquem or ab aliquo, gratum facere alci; to owe — to any one, gratiam alci debere; to feel —, gratiam (not often gratias) habere alci (χαρίν ἔχειν or εὐδέναι τι), when that which we — for is not expressed at all, as in Cic., or in a separate sentence with quod, Cic., or in a sentence connected with the preceding one by qui, e.g. ego illi maximam gratiam habeo qui me ad penam multaverit; the great —, — gratiam habeo quantum maximam animus capere potest (to — most sincerely); to return —, gratias agere or persolvere (χαρίν ὁμολογεῖν or χαρίνας λέγειν, in words or in writing, also with quod or qui, not pro aliqua re), gratiam alci referre, reddere, for, pro aliqua (χαρίν ἀποδοῦναι, through the deed; gratias ref. is very seldom used, and in Cic. Phil. 3, 15, 39, we find it only because the other nouns in connexion with it are expressed in the pl.); not —, gratiam negligere; to earn, deserve —, gratiam capere; nobody will thank you for it, ingratum erit; to accept, receive with —, in gratiam accipere, grate accipere or excipere; with my most hearty —, gratissime accipere (e.g. munus); — God! est diis gratia! my very best —! (in returning a compliment), see before. Thankful, adj. gratus; see Grateful. Thankfulness, n., see Gratitude. Thanksgiving prayer, preces grati in Deum animi testes, also gratulatione, supplicatio (for victories, for deliverance, from sickness); to appoint — to be read in the churches, gratulationem (supplicationem) decernere; letter of thanks, litteræ gratæ gratæ animo alcijs beneficia prosequimur. Thankless, adj., see Ungrateful.

That, demonstr. pron. ille, illa, illud, iste, ista, istud (ille, without being in opp. to hic, often used when we speak of something very well known, very celebrated, of any thing or person remote as regards time or place, but present in the mind of the speaker; iste = that, only when we speak of a third person or thing, with the idea of contempt or disapproval, — mun there, alter (the other of two), pl. alteri, if we speak of several on the other side); is, ea, id, hic, hæc, hoc; those who, illi qui or the relative clause preceding qui, ii, — of, the word — not expressed, e.g. facit corpora aormata ut mortui (not ut id v.), subscribere quatuor. Le bruti statuer. Etiam vives! stem ipsius

Cæsar, etc. (— of C. or C's, Snet.); — is my father, hic est meus pater; — only is true friendship, hæc demum est amicitia firma; often by sic, e.g. — is his way, sic est ingenium ejus; — is the way of people, sic est vita hominum; = such a one, etc., is, ea, id; — age, id ætatis; at — time, id temporis; we are at — age, id jam ætatis sumus.

That, rel. pron. qui, quæ, quod, see Who.

That, conj., to connect the main clause: A, when the sentence with — contains the subject of the copula in the main sentence; (1) when the sentence with — conveys a general idea, render by the inf., e.g. officii est, etc., or by another noun, e.g. nihil suavius est quam amari or amor; (2) when the sentence with — refers merely to one particular person, by the acc. and inf., e.g. after "it is pleasing, rejoicing, grieving, probable, clear, manifest, evident, true, it appears, it is useful, right, reasonable, necessary, lawful, it is allowed" (licet with acc. and inf., when we speak in general; the person in the dat. if we only refer to one person mentioned); after several of these impersonal verbs, use also quod and ut, see under D and E (e.g. it is pleasing to hear that you are well, gratum est tibi ut callere); (3) than —, as —, inf. with an adv. or another noun with an adj. or part., e.g. nulla res tanto erat damno, etc., quam (a noun with an adj. or part.). B, when the sentence with — contains the object of the verb of the main clause; either the noun in the acc. with or without possessive pron., or another noun in the gen., or the acc. and inf.; (1) this is the case after all verba sciunt et affectuum, to which belong also "to know, conceive, remind, expect, hope, fear, believe," etc.; then also after fac, when it is = finge, fancy —, etc., fac qui ego sum esse te; after the verbs "to hope, swear, promise, threaten," we use the acc. and fut. inf., only after "to hope" we use the acc. and pres. inf. when we speak of any thing referring to the present time, and the acc. and pres. inf. when we speak of any thing past; (2) after the so-called verba declarandi, as "to say, tell, indicate, remember, convince, teach, prove (efficere)," etc.; (3) also after "to fix, determine, wish, forbid, impose, concede (that any thing is so)," etc., the inf., if the sentence with — declares the object, whilst if it contains a wish or intention, we use ut; after "they," "the people say," "it is reported," etc. (dicunt, tradunt, ferunt, prout, perhibent), either by acc. and inf., or the nom. and inf. (of the passive voice), e.g. dicunt Romulum primum regem Romanorum fuisse or Romulus primus rex Romanorum fuisse dicebatur; dicunt vos adfuisse or vos dicebamini adfuisse; after duobus, in the sense "I doubt not," we find in Cic. always quin, only in the sense "I do not hesitate" merely the inf. C, when the sentence with — contains a statement, either explanatory or referring to circumstances, by the gerund or the part. fut. pass., as when we say "they obtained it by this means, that," etc. (abl. of the gerund). D, when the sentence with — contains a description of any thing or a circumst., (1) of the subject, when we can put "which" instead of "that," by quod, as after "there is reason," or "there is no reason," (which, etc.), est (habeo), non est, nihil est (we may also use cur, as in English); also after "it is pleasing, rejoicing, I am glad, it is painful," etc. (e.g. nihil est quod [i.e. illud quod] timeas); also after "we must add (eo or huc accedit)," where we use quod when we speak of a matter of fact; and ut when we refer to any thing that is only in progress, always when the thing is only about to happen; (2) of the object when — is = "because," also by quod after "to be glad, rejoice (gaudere), to fear, sorrow, grieve (dolere), to wonder (mirari)," etc., where we use quod (for) when we speak of a definite fact, but si (ei) if we speak of something merely imaginary or as we suppose it; also after "to thank, congratulate, praise, accuse;" (3) when — stands for "inasmuch as,

mas. as," also by quod, as when we say "never that I know," e.g. non ego te, quod (quantum) etiam, unquam vidi. E, always ut when the sentence with — expresses the condition, aim, effect or consequence, surmise, permission, encouragement, wish or command, as subject or object, or as additional clause; after is sum, non is sum, talis, qualis, is (such a one), ejusmodi, etc.; also qui, etc. (ut is, etc.), after tam, tantus (generally after negatives, after quis? and after comparatives with quam, when these words express the degree, measure, up to which any thing is said to possess a certain quality; but we say also ut is, etc., when we speak of a result, or to avoid ambiguity, esp. when qui does occur besides); — not, after "to fear, to be afraid," etc., ne non, seldom ut, and alone, ne; only — not, that — by any means, ut ne (ne being placed before that which is prevented), e.g. ut hoc ne facerem (he took care —, etc.); I say that . . . not, etc., by nego with acc. and inf., e.g. he asserts that there are no gods, deum esse negat. F, when — is = to "since," quoniam, ex quo, e.g. anni sunt plures ex quo eum non vidi. G, — in exclamations, (1) when we express a wish, oh —! ut! utinam! o si (see Oh!); God grant —, etc., faxit Deus, ut, etc.; — not! utinam ne! (2) in general exclamations, by acc. and inf. (which apparently is not governed by any preceding verb), e.g. me miserum! te in tantas arumnas propter me incidisse!

Thatched, adj., — house, casa stramento tecta. Thaw, v.intr., it —, glacies lresfacta molitur, nives tabesunt calore. Thaw, n. tabes mus.

Witch, n. venefica, anus or anula cantatrix (App. Met.), maga, saga.

With, prep. (A) in union, (1) cum, una cum; often simply rendered by the abl. with an adj., e.g. omnibus copiis egredi; (2) in friendly intercourse, cum; after verbs compounded with cum, either cum with abl. or simply the dative, e.g. what have I to do — you? quid tibi mecum est rei? after words expressing similarity or equality, the simple dat. (but after similis and its compounds, also the genit.); when two things are represented as being equal to one another, by idem (the same, etc.), the prep. "with" is rendered by quo or a copulative conjunction, seldom by cum with abl. (in Greek and only in poets simply by the dat.); (3) in participation, (a) in confederacy with, cum, e.g. cum algo bellum gerere adversus alqm; (b) = by means of, (a) of a person, per with acc., alcijs opem, alcijs ope, auxilio, algo auctore (e.g. hanc sectionem auctore Iuliano recepi, where it would be bad to say cum Iuliano); also sometimes by the simple abl. (e.g. Crassus ad legionem, quam secum habebat, murum perduxit in altitudinem, etc.); to speak —, i.e. to use any one's words (in a speech, etc.), by alcijs verbis uti (not, as modern writers, by cum algo loqui), e.g. to speak — Horace, ut Horatii verbo or verbis utar (Quint.), or simply auctore Horatio, Cic.; (β) of a thing, either by the simple abl. (when merely expressing instrumentality) or by per with acc. (when expressing the use of an act), e.g. per contumeliam; (γ) in a hostile sense, cum, contra, adversus with acc. (the two latter used when cum might be misunderstood, as it might also mean "in union with," etc.), e.g. bellum gerere cum algo or contra (adversus) alqm; after a substantive, such as "war" — "contest," it may also be rendered by cum with a participle, e.g. the war — the Gauls, bellum cum Gallis gestum (seldom simply bellum cum Gallis) or by the adj. of the nation with which the war is carried on, e.g. the war — the Gauls, bellum Gallicum; or by the gen. of the persons with whom the war is carried on, e.g. the war — the pirates, bellum praedonum, the war — King Pyrrhus, Pyrrhi regis bellum; (B) in company and accompanied by, (1) of persons, cum (along —); but if only expressing that one particular action refers to more than one person, it is generally rendered in Latin simply by a copulative conjunction (et, ac, atque); only poets and historians use cum for et (as in Greek καὶ for καί), e.g. the women — their children were killed, mulieres atque infantes occisi sunt; the chief with a few noblemen is taken prisoner, dux cum aliquot principibus capitur or (as always in the historians) capitur; (2) of things, cum; it is often rendered in this sense (mixed, furnished —, etc.) more clearly by participles or adjs., or by a relative clause, e.g. mixed — a dagger, cum sicca, sicca instructus; a bay — pearls, sacculus in quo sunt margaritae; (3) of what happened at the same time as something else, (a) with a person, cum, e.g. suus in Cileis et cum tribunus militum; but if "with somebody" is = "in or on any one's person," it cannot be rendered by cum, but by apposition, e.g. — him a great poet was born, ille magnus poeta natus est; (b) with a thing, cum, e.g. — these words he returned to Rome, cum his Romanus rediit; — the condition that, etc., cum eo, ut, etc.; (c) at the same time as some phenomenon that takes place in the course of time, cum, or (but less expressive) by the simple abl., e.g. — daybreak, cum primis luce, prima luce; hence also of effects and consequences that are simultaneous and immediate or direct, = not without, cum, non sine; e.g. to hear, etc. — pleasure, cum voluptate; in many instances by particular expressions, e.g. — care, diligenter, or by construction with a participle, e.g. — quickness, adhibita celeritate; — that, inde, deinde, ad hoc.

Yes, adv. (to express affirmation or consent), ita, ita est, sic est (it is so); recte (as a word of politeness, certainly), certe (assuredly), cero (indeed, when we affirm with greater emphasis), etiam, sane, sane quidem (of course), imo (does not exactly express consent in the common way of speaking, but implies an antithesis, either strengthening the affirmation, or correcting what has been said immediately before, yes, say, e.g. qui hoc! intellexisti! / nonndum ne hoc quidem? D. imo callide); generally however we use none of these particles to express consent, but we speak more accurately and with greater emphasis by repeating either the word or that word upon which the stress lies in a question, e.g. will you come? veniesne? yes! veniam! are you going to my house? mene vis? yes! te! Clitipho came here; did he come alone? Clitipho huc adit; solus? yes! solus! — certainly! itane vero? scitne vero? (when we are surprised), recte! belli! ita scilicet (surely!), etiam (when we all on a sudden, at the last moment, think of something that we have forgotten, Cic. Att. vii. 3, 12); I say Yes, aito, affirmo, annuo (in nodding); you say Yes, lo! I say No, tu ais, ego nego; to answer Yes or No, aut etiam aut non respondere; I can answer Yes and No, nutu ac renutu respondere possun; to say Yes to any thing, in alqd re assentiri; to say Yes to every thing, omnia assentari (out of servility, etc.); to answer a question with Yes, alqd affirmare; yes, so it is, judges, sic res habet, iudices: to enforce something which precedes, imo (see before) or imo vero, imo enim vero, imo vero etiam (nay, what is even more), quia etiam, atque etiam, atque adeo.
